Funeral Services of John A. Fisher

A large crowd of neighbors and friends assembled at the church of the Brethren Friday to pay their last respects to Mr. John A. Fisher, whose death took place at his home in Arrowood, on Tuesday, November 30th, after a lingering illness.

He was the son of Terry and Fanny Fisher and was born at Rochester, Indiana, January 27th, 1884, died Nov. 30th aged 60 years, 10 months and 3 days. There are left to mourn his wife, four children (Elton, of Bracken, Saak); Mrs. Florence Arnold, of Logansport, Ind.; Mrs. Ruth Shatto, Arrowood and Mrs. Mary Miller, of Columbiana, Ohio; and four grand children. On Oct. 28th, 1888, he married Miss Ida Richer. He united with the Church of the Brethren in 1890, of which he has been a loyal member ever since. His place in church was seldom vacant until deprived of the privilege on account of sickness, which fact caused him many regrets.

The family emigrated to North Dakota in 1898, residing for a time at Devils Lake. They lived at Devils Lake for a number of years, moving to Madison Hat in the year 1911, finally settling at Arrowood, where the last years of his life were spent, and after an illness of two years passed on to the Great Beyond.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. H. Brubaker, who took his text from St. John 14:3. He was assisted by John Wiesand and Rev. J. S. Culpeir took place in the Arrowood Cemetery.

The choir sang beautifully the hymns, "The City Four Square," "Meet Me There" and "Bliss Be The Tie That Binds."

The quartette sang, "Does Jesus Care?"

Many floral tributes testified to the esteem in which the late Mr. Fisher was held.

Following were the pallbearers: E. Lewendon, G. E. Harp, V. E. Vancl, S. M. Burger I., Miller, and Lawrence Larsen.

It is too bad to tell, but the ladies were beaten.

A sit-down lunch was provided and was much enjoyed by all, after which the prizes were awarded. Everyone then departed for home, feeling that they had all profited greatly by the interchange of the different styles and ideas of Bridge, both in bidding and the playing of hands.

The Committee wish to take this opportunity of thanking all those who made this new venture such a success, by their willingness to co-operate and help, and especially Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Taylor for the use of their abode.

Brethren Young People Entertained

A large group of Brethren young people attended the most interesting party of the season at Burris' last Friday evening.

A business meeting was the first item on the program. A motto for the class was decided upon. A paper was passed around to be signed by those wishing an Arrowood Debating Society. A discussion followed about having a home study Bible course. A committee was appointed to solicit the community for home students.

The remainder of the evening was spent enjoying games directed by our most able committee, Misses Lila Clifgard, Rosemary Lord and Vera Hesketh.

A delightful lunch was served which was a grand finish to a joyous evening.

The next round was played on Friday, Dec. 1, when Eaton and Ross eliminated Miller and Duncan, in the main event, and Clifgard and Sharland eliminated Mrs. Hesketh and Mr. Lewendon, in the consolation.

The finals were played on Monday, Dec. 4. — Also all those who had taken part in the tournament from the start, were again drawn and some very interesting games were the result. — The real interest centered on the main event.

At this stage they were playing Leon bridge, all players being right on their toes, and taking advantage of every opportunity.

It is too bad to tell, but the ladies were beaten.

A sit-down lunch was provided and was much enjoyed by all, after which the prizes were awarded. Everyone then departed for home, feeling that they had all profited greatly by the interchange of the different styles and ideas of Bridge, both in bidding and the playing of hands.

Will Inflation Benefit?

One of the many results flowing out of the Great War was the development of a narrow nationalism which found expression in many ways and has had a profound effect upon not only national policies but in forms and methods of government. Out of the Great War there were many more intense than in the days of the titanic struggle. That economic war led to the use of tariffs, quotas, and other trade restrictions on a scale hitherto unknown. All nations engaged in it, some reluctantly, but because they were forced into it by the actions of other nations.

As this economic war progressed it inevitably led to still another—war in the exchange. The value of the currencies one nation rose or fell in relation to the value of the currencies of other nations, and as it rose or fell it directly affected the trade of the nations as well as the whole financial structure of all, and the ability of one group of people to meet its obligations to another group.

From this it follows that a single step to a third form of warfare, the war of control of currencies, that is, the abandonment of the gold standard, but a few still adhere to it. Then comes the struggle of the currencies. Abandoning the gold standard was a measure of inflation. The next step was the more or less gradual reduction of the value of national currencies in terms of gold, the object being to raise prices which had fallen to a disastrously low ebb. In other words, policies of inflation were embarked upon.

But always in war, no matter the nature of the struggle, one party or country always endeavors to outdo the other. It is so in physical warfare; it is true in any tariff war. It is equally true in a war of inflation. When one country embarks upon a policy of inflation, even though it be primarily a matter of domestic concern alone, it immediately affects representations in other countries. So when one country begins a policy of inflation, it is destined to follow. But other countries will follow suit, and, in following suit, of course, seek to go other countries "one better."

Whatever may be said in favor of a degree of inflation on the one hand, or deflation on the other, to meet changing economic conditions—and a country engaging in either the one policy or the other always proceeds on the assumption that great care is taken to prevent inflation from getting out of hand—the net result invariably is that it does get out of control, and the final stage of affairs is made worse rather than improved, and the process of financial recovery made more difficult and of longer duration, with losses made heavier.

A policy of inflation is being applied in the United States at the present time. Always President Roosevelt is anxious to keep it going, but there are great and growing voices that carry it far beyond what Congress and the public and his own advisers have in mind. Can the situation be controlled? When Congress re-assembles, indications are not lacking that great pressure will be applied to put the printing press to work turning out billions of paper money, in addition to the present inflationary policy of decreasing the value of the dollar. And Congress is still more in the United States than it is in the Senate. It is up to the President giving himself almost dictatorial powers. But it can withdraw those powers, or it can't do so much farther than the President and his advisers deem it wise to go.

And Canada cannot be indifferent to or prove immune from the effects of United States policy, whatever it may be. Our trade and other relationships are too closely interwoven, and our financial undertakings, both public and private, are too closely connected with those of the United States. Like it or not, Canadian policy must, necessarily, be governed to some extent, possibly a large extent,—by United States policy in this matter.

Inflation and deflation, and their consequences, may be traced back over the course of history, dating back to the years B.C., and the lessons of history teach us that inflation appears to happen generally. If it does not always, it does eventually. There is no limit to the amount of control, but movement usually ends by breaking all bounds. Increased purchasing power through inflation is only temporary; higher prices stimulate over-production and check consumption; new debts appear, and a return to stability is increasingly difficult.

The depression beginning in 1929 was preceded by wild speculation, especially in installment buying on an expansion of credit, but encouraged and stimulated by installment selling on a scale never before witnessed. Many were the warnings issued at the time this wholesale expansion of credit, and unprecedented installment buying, was in progress. It could be seen by anyone willing to pause and consider that such installment buying—all based on credit—could not go indefinitely; that a point must be reached when where millions of individuals committed to installment buying would reach a point of exhaustion, purchasing power, having used up all their credit and pledged all their resources. The saturation point was reached late in 1929, and the crash followed.

People had bought land, houses, motor cars, radios, equipment of all kinds, and many luxuries all on the promise to pay weekly, monthly, yearly installments. The time came when they could make no more contributions, so production stopped, and with its stoppage, millions were thrown out of employment and were thus placed in a position where they could not meet their deferred installment payments. Prices fell, and everybody sustained losses.

Inflation might temporarily raise prices, just as speculation and installment buying—which, after all, was inflation pure and simple—did raise prices. But one form of inflation can not overcome the evils caused by another form of inflation.

SYNOPSIS

Camilla Haze, young and beautiful art student, and Peter Anson, struggling sculptor, fall in love and marry secretly, deciding to live apart until the sculptor can support himself. Camilla, the adopted daughter of wealthy parents, is not interested in Peter, but she loves him. She is preparing herself for life with a course in commercial art, hoping to get a job as responsible her to support herself. She has been making the rounds of agencies.

(Now Go On With The Story)

CHAPTER XIX.

Returning home, Camilla was surprised to discover that she was with the day's efforts. Study and class at school had been her hobby, but there was a vast difference between preparation for work, and work itself, or even obtaining it, she had never had success. While she dressed in dinner, she mused over in her mind some of the traits which had made themselves evident to her that day. She always had supposed that if you were willing to work, there was a place for you. It was obvious that not only was her position wrong, but that even if you were capable of doing the work you chose, you were given the opportunity.

Camilla gazed around the furnishings of the big luxurious rooms that had sheltered her for so long, and making rapid calculations with the values of her possessions, she was astounded at the time she estimated it would require her to earn the money they represented.

Even if she were given the opportunity to work for pay, how long would it take her to earn what the clothes she was putting on had cost her?

Her mother was a simple model that had cost three hundred dollars, her, shoes, twenty-five; her stockings and lingerie another seventy-five. Her wardrobe and dressing table drawers were filled with such costly garments.

Of course, she knew that when she earned her own living, she would no longer patronize exclusive shops and wear hand embroidered lingerie. But many of the women who wore such articles could earn the money for even very poor substitutes, if they were obliged to. With sadness, panic, she wondered if she could.

She gazed over the triple shelves of her dressing table. Camilla did not see her glowing beauty. She was gazing into the vast and chaotic abyss that gaped suddenly at her feet—that mass of life which she was about to step into. She was not yet confident and secure; standing now at the brink and gazing into its abyssal depths, she drew back with horror. Then suddenly, there appeared before her

"But that isn't now." She tossed the stub of her cigarette into a tray and walked across the room to stand beside Peter. A heavy fragrance enveloped him, and Camilla's eyes were drawn to the source of the perfume. She was a girl who was delicate for work. Of course, a girl like Silvia Todd needed money extravagantly when she did have it and therefore was the opposite when she did not, a consciousness of want being her confidential voice. "Tell you what I'll do, Mr. Anson. I'll work for half the regular pay, everything being on the down and down. And if I were not hungry—just because of the bottomless hole I'd work for you for nothing," she added softly.

The word "hungry" startled Peter and touched that responsive chord in him that denied no creature his pity. "It is as bad as?" he demanded anxiously.

She nodded, her head lowered, and when she looked up again the blue eyes glistened with tears, like dew on blue violets. But she smiled wanly.

"I walked out here all the way from seventhaven, so I could use my last dime for a sandwich to have strength to work on."

"But what made you think I would hire you?"

"I heard you were going to enter the exhibit, and had no model yet. Don't you think I would do?" wistfully.

"You might—I thought I needed a model," he said thoughtfully, as he was considering something. Finally, "Tell you what I'll do: give me a dollar a week for a model. I'll work two days a week for you."

"Exactly. And five and five make ten—that's two days for a model. I can't afford one."

"And where do you expect to get without one?"

"I don't know. I did that without one. I'm sure you'll find me a good one."

"Sure. And that's the first idea. I'll make the price as low as possible. After all, one meal a day is better than none."

Girl Says Spinning Baton Is A Dangerous Weapon

Even drum-majoring has its hazards, according to Miss Slann, of Waltham, Mass., warning:

Who ever handled a baton for the first time years ago, but who now holds five drum major championships, two of them national, discussed her art on her return from China, where she won the National American Legion drum major contest.

The baton with which this eighteen-year-old girl has won her title cost her $100. Recently its owner says:

"I had to be perfectly careful to hit it well right as you pass it from one hand to the other. You have to be careful of the steel ball at the end because when you get the stick spinning fast it is liable to become unbalanced and the ball will strike you in the face or stomach."

"Afraid you might lose the scholarship?"

"More afraid I might win if you will pardon my conceit."

"You are stared at in surprise."

"We are you crazy, or am I cuckoo to you?"

"Neither. I hope. It just happens that affairs have developed recently to change my plans."

She watched him with a calculating expression for a moment. "A girl?"

"You aren't by any chance, a detective?" he inquired.

"If I were," he laughed, "I might not eat out of work."

"I don't know," Peter observed. "The depression has hit everything."

"Don't I know it? Models in particular. Say, listen, Big Boy, when there's work enough to go half way around, this baby has more than she can do."

"I don't doubt it."

NORMAN G. CARY,
Editor and PublisherStudy the Bible At Your Home

An Opportunity Is Offered To Every Reader of the Resource. A Direct Course of Instruction in the New Testament Is Offered to Everyone Without Cost

The Church of the Brethren District Mission Board, of which Rev. J. H. Brubaker is chairman, has authorized the conducting of a home Bible study course. This series of lessons will begin about January 1.

It will be directed by Rev. Wiegand. There will be about twelve lessons on the New Testament, one each week. The aim of the course is to make a general survey of the New Testament for the purpose of increasing appreciation for it while adding to the knowledge of and about it.

Each week a lesson sheet will be given to every family willing to follow the line of study. This will consist of questions, instruction and directions for study. These will be handed out at church or sent in the mail.

The Bible will be the main text book. No other text will be necessary. There will be no charges. No one need feel under obligation in a financial way. However, contributions for this purpose may be made to the District Mission Board.

In order that the one directing the work may know what progress is being made, and be better able to give the needed guidance, the questions should be answered each week by each person or by a family or group studying together, and he answers returned regularly, either in person or in the mail. Notes should be carefully taken on all study. This will be a help in fixing the information in the mind and also facilitate review.

This work is for every one. Each person who is old enough should enroll. The studying may be done by individuals or in family or other groups. It will take time. But every body has that. Busy people only need to plan their time, and sufficient will be available for this work. The least amount of time given to this work should be two hours per week. Those who can may well give more time to the work. Two hours a day would not be too much. But time will be necessary. Leadership training credit will be received by those successfully completing this course.

Every person willing to study should register. All who can get along with one study sheet should register on the same card. This is not limited to members of the Church of the Brethren. Let's have one hundred enrollments in and around Arrowwood.

Further information will be gladly given. Inquire of Rev. John Wiegand or any of the young people of the Church of the Brethren.

There seems to be quite an interest developing around town in the debating society idea. In one group of young people there were thirteen who signified a desire to have part in such an organization. Quite a number of others have expressed an interest. We know there are others in the community who are interested. Surely the time is about ripe for the forming of such an organization.

In making a choice between transportation by rail and by road, many factors must be considered. What the railroads are doing and what they can do for their advantage. G. O.
